ABOUT THE MANOR

This ancient Saxon lordship is situated three miles north east of Lutterworth in the Hundred of Guthlaxton, Leicestershire. The area of the lordship is about 3,000 acres.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, in 1086, Ralph held the lordship under the Bishop of Lincoln.

The land was equal to eight ploughs of which one was held in demesne. The other seven were held by six socmen and six villeins. There were seven bordars who had four ploughs. Also, there were ten acres of meadow.

By 1279 the lordship was held by Alan Fitz Rohald, who claimed free warren and fishing rights. The Rohald family continued to hold the lordship. In 1346 Alland Rohald was assessed for duties at thirty shillings for Kimcote Manor. She was the wife of Roger Rohald and daughter of Sir Richard Lovell. Elizabeth was their only daughter and heir to the lordship.

Elizabeth carried the lordship in marriage to Sir Roger Champernown, who s family held the manor for four generations.

In 1475, John Champernown died, lord of the manor, leaving two daughters; Blanche who married Robert Lord Willoughby de Broke, Lord Admiral of England and Joan, who died without children. Thus, this lordship came to Lord Willoughby de Broke, who s family have held the lordship until the present day.

Rights, customs and incidentsBy 1279 the lordship was held by Alan Fitz Rohald, who claimed free warren and fishing rights.
